to show the way each poet remains an individual while interacting with the conditions of a particular historical context quite exceptionally good one of the finest collections of criticism for years it blends historical insight and critical perception with real originality frank kermode london review of books she has an acute ear for a poet's voice both in the individual life and in the work as a whole she convincingly hears the timbre of the sonnet sequence in the sounds and silences of keats odes and she catches donne sounding both like a preacher and a great frequenter of plays neatly characterizing his tone as one of amiable rancour but an ear without a brain is not enough barbara everett also shows a developed and fastidious historical imagination tim deveson times educational supplement it makes me feel like a donkey munching thistles the prose in these critical studies is knotty but nourishing and each essay emphasises the essential unfamiliarity of the well known jonathan keats independent the kind of thoughtful appreciation is that donne among others would agree was worth waiting a few hundred years for clive james observer byron was a man of many passions always fiercely held and defended but his intense devotion to the poetry of alexander pope seemed to characterise a man standing a little to the left of the romantic universe while pope largely left a taste of dust in the mouths of the romantics byron continued to defend the little queen anne's man in letters and in print as if he were arguing for the reputation of a lover so much so that we are left to wonder what kind of impression did the greatest poet of the eighteenth century leave upon the work of the seminal poet of the nineteenth how far and in what way did byron's adoration of pope imprint itself upon his own poetry in conscious and unconscious echoes in parallels of thought and expression in the unexpected unlooked for congruence this book identifies and lays out the most significant strands of that influence following them wherever they lead through exploring both poets satirical portraits of men and women their expression of love and forbidden passion their various poetic techniques the influence of the roman poet horace and the dual resonance of eden and paradise in their work a picture emerges of pope touching the deepest recesses of byron's poetic thought amongst the particular themes discussed here are the presence of women in the lives and poetry of both men the disentangling of the sense of alienation and exile exhibited in their authorial psyches the significance of the doppelgänger for their satire and a weighing of the deep contrapuntal nature of Byron's thought contrasting it with Pope's Byron and the best of poets is the first major study of its kind to explore these multiple aspects and to unpack them in the work of both poets
